

Joseph Sebastian R. Javier

The past four years have been a journey of formation for Joseph – of putting together pieces of himself that seemed irreconcilable. To some, he may come off as an incomprehensible contradiction: an iconoclast with an appreciation for tradition, an outspoken introvert, a classical romantic. But in truth, he is many things at the same time, suspended in very human paradoxes, yet able to grow beyond the boundaries that most people impose on themselves.

Kristine Celine C. Kwok

Life has taught me that things are not constant. Friends come and go, but so do problems. That is the reality that I have faced. But, this journey in Ateneo also showed me that even when distance sets us apart, there are still some constants in my life. True, some people from my anchor have rusted away through time. However, my anchor has also strengthened with a fresh coat of friends. As for now, I need to learn the ability to let go and remove this anchor to embark onto a new journey.