

Mary Elaine D. Casama

You are the storm to your own calm. You often flood yourself with worries. You tire yourself trying to swim, finding it difficult to keep yourself afloat.

Many years from now, I hope you see this and be reminded of how strong and passionate you are. Each year you face challenges tougher than the last but you're not one to give up without a fight.

So hey, keep yourself from drowning and remember that you never swim alone.

Kendall J. Colet

Entering Ateneo as an Archer was a complete 180. In La Salle, I was taught to aim high and aim high I did. However, in Ateneo, I was taught to fly high. Admittedly, this was not always easy, especially in times of turbulent weather. But in the toughest moments, I learned to spread my wings, not clip them to my sides. And as I soon go down the hill, I have both the blue and the green to thank for my journey in the clouds. In the end, I really did get the best of both worlds.