

MINOR IN FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

Wendell A. Laxamana

For all the debits and credits, losses and gains, outflows and inflows, risks and returns, thank you, Ateneo. Thank you for giving me my best asset—finding balance between who I am and who I can be. Thank you for teaching me to constantly breathe in the beauty of the world through my lens and be comfortable with uncertainties, for one cannot imagine a world without a bright escape from a tunnel of darkness. Thank you for reminding me that everything—however bad it may seem—will still end well.

DOUBLE MINOR IN ECONOMICS AND INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY

Wilbert Jan R. Liao

I remember doubting myself back in freshman year whether or not I would even make it past the first semester. Here I am now, after four great years, making this write-up at the very last minute, as usual. I guess what drove me to where I am now are my family and friends who were always there to support me.

A wise man once told me “You only quit when the job is done.” Honestly, I still have a long way to go. But to everyone reading this, just know that if there’s a Will, there’s a Bert.
