

Matthew Vincent C. Tan

The Japanese word wabi-sabi is about accepting life's imperfections. My college journey is represented by this and the symbol of yin and yang, the balance and fusion of light and dark. Over the past four years, I have rejoiced, cried, failed, and stood up again. Yet despite the tears and agony, I am grateful for all these events, because without them, I would still be stuck in my own shell. And as my journey persists, I will continue to embrace the ups and downs of life and keep moving forward.

MINOR IN ECONOMICS; MINOR IN ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT

Neil Brian C. Tan

If I had to describe Kyra in a word, it would have to be sunshine. When sun shines, dark clouds disappear – and that's exactly how Kyra is. Her cheerfulness and positive outlook in life make everyone feel better without her trying. She might look small and meek, but in truth, she's one of the strongest people out there. She pushes through every challenge and finishes each one without letting her bright character fade away. She's a ball of sunshine that has and will brighten the days of many.