

MINOR IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

Sophia Andrea R. Climaco

It's strange how little, almost unnoticed moments can add up to a story. Little things like the smell of coffee while trying to meet a deadline, late nights out with friends, weekends out with family, small prayers before big exams. These are where life happens — in the little details.

More than anything, college taught me about the beauty of these small things, and I am all the better for it. (D. Cheng)

MINOR IN STRATEGIC HUMAN RESOURCES MANAGEMENT

Mark M. Co

The more I look back on my four years, the more I realize that the most important lessons were taught through struggles and challenges, through 2AM papers and 8AM exams, through days when I just wanted to get by. They were also learned through triumphs and laughter, through friendships formed and moments lived. Sometimes, the lessons were clear, and other times, they were more ambiguous. But I think that was the beauty of it: I made them my own. Thank you, Ateneo, for the experience. (D. Cheng)
