To you who's reading this, I got a few reminders before you set sail. You'll learn to wait. And wait anxiously at that. For the more you wait for your reward, the bigger it becomes before it gets to you. You'll also have to go with the current's flow. For gaining control may have to also mean letting go of it. And you must learn to love despite differences and compromise, for not being free but being loved may mean being free in the end. Go! There are troubled waters ahead, but I believe in you.

What matters most are the goals you set for yourself and the life you want to live. No one, not your friends, parents, or even your teachers can tell you otherwise. People may try to help you along the way, but ultimately, you make your own life. I will never forget the people I went through Ateneo with, both teachers and friends, for teaching me how to discern my own life, and for that, I will always be grateful to all of them. Thank you, Ateneo, for helping me be me.
