

Anthea Isabelle C. Pangilinan

“Little boat, come home. You’ve sailed to islands and uncharted seas, met new creatures and fellow sailors, gone as far as the eye could see. Little boat, it’s time to come back to where you pushed off. The pier has changed since you’ve gone, but so have you, little one. The whole wide world is still out there, you’re still aching to explore. But, little boat, now’s your chance to go where you’re needed more. Little boat, it’s time. Little boat, come home.”
(Anonymous)

Maria Eon Divina G. Peñafiel

These past four years have ignited a passion within me that I did not expect: a passion for people. College has taught me that while my projects and deadlines are over, the people I have met stay with me unwaveringly. They have managed to anchor me into reality by teaching me to move through the curved roads with grace. To stumble and fall in a place filled with infinitely passionate people has rendered this bittersweet journey not only bearable, but possible and worthwhile.