

MINOR IN FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

John Jeofrey D. Bantayan, Jr.

The last four years were a grand witness to a lot of changes, myself included. Clearly, there is nothing else to thank but the humbling encounters with people who challenged me, trusted me, and believed in me. I once set sail not knowing where I would end up, and now I find myself preparing to do so again. If there's anything I am sure of at this point, it's the fact that I have changed for the better — and I intend to keep on changing as I embark on new adventures.

Belle has spent her life in Ateneo with morning coffees in the cafeteria and long strolls through scenic walkways. Now, she is leaving a place that has given her long-lasting friendships and longer-lasting life lessons that she learned beyond the four walls of an ordinary classroom. She is now entering her greatest “what if,” and it will be the first one that won't run the risk of breaking her; what she is leaving behind has prepared her enough for this. (H. Nolasco)
