

MINOR IN KOREAN STUDIES

Phylicia E. Pangilinan

I wasn't supposed to be here. I always thought I wouldn't make it. But here I am now, coming down from the hill. To the people who believed in me more than I have ever believed in myself, I owe it all to you.

My stay in the Ateneo brought me down to my lowest point and up to my highest peak. I made many mistakes, which I always tried to learn from. I felt at times both triumphant and defeated. I gained and lost loved ones. During all that time, I learned that there is only one thing we must do throughout our lives: we must always love, no matter what. When we find ourselves battered, broken, bruised, hurt, sad, and full of hate, that is when it is most important that we do our best to love.
