

Monina Maxine R. Olaguer

At the start, I told the people closest to me that I felt lost or I didn't know exactly what it was that I was passionate about. I kept looking. Through the years, I put in work, made friends that I love and care for, shared hugs and tears as we all broke down simultaneously, lost a parent and lifted myself up. All this time, I have seen and appreciated the beauty in everything. My time here is coming to an end and it was all worth it because I no longer need to ask myself where my passion lies.

Arantxa Maccine J. Orig

Coming from the depths of this deep, dark ocean, I've managed, with great difficulty, to make it to the surface. Now, with the sun warming my skin and the clouds above my head, I can look forward to a new journey. A journey beyond the ocean that, for the past four years, has been my home.