

Victoria Isabella M. Isleta

I met Vic in our Merit English class in freshman year. It was intimidation that brought us together. Among the best writers in our batch, there was she and I — neither of us sure of how we ended up in that class. But in just three years, her strides towards the outside of her comfort zone widened: from taking a leadership role in MEA to living in Germany for five months and others in between. I watched happily from the sidelines as she turned intimidation into inspiration. (S. Santos)

Hanna Sofia S. Khio

I was told that to those we can, we must. Here's to fighting against the system for those who are disadvantaged and to those who simply can't — always and in all ways.