

MINOR IN JAPANESE STUDIES

Nicholas Martino G. Tan

In Ateneo, I learned to face the consequences of my choices – of cramming all-nighters, of joining orgs, of taking certain subjects under certain professors. With the help of my friends, I learned how to take the lemons life throws, make some really sour lemonade, and throw it back in life's face. It hasn't been an easy four years, and it only gets harder from here on out – but that just means I get to throw more lemonade.
