I've always had an ideal image when I entered college. But as the semesters passed just as quickly as they came, I think I may have gotten something better than the ideal I had before. From having several people to have lunch with to having a handful of constant faces occupying my free time; from keeping a low profile to being more assertive, I never knew that college would be a whirlwind of emotions for me but I don't regret the choices I've made or the people that stayed with me the whole way.
