

Jacob M. Santiago

Jacob's life in his first year of college was completely different from his life for the next three. He was once a party animal who went to Makati or the Fort almost every day. He would always ask, "Fort, G? GB, G? Makati, G?"—a tagline that most of his blockmates would associate with him. Upon his shift into ME, he began a life of mostly studying in the library and cafés. This is a story of how I saw him work hard to survive in ME, a story of how I believe he will succeed in the future.

Forget your plans and let go of preconceived notions: That's what I learned in Ateneo. Things never went according to plan. From day one, everything kept going the exact way I didn't want them to go. That doesn't mean I didn't enjoy the experience — actually quite the opposite. I've come to embrace change of all kinds, to adapt to the situation at hand, and to keep moving forward with no regrets. So thanks, Ateneo, for allowing me to experience the wildest four-year rollercoaster ride yet.
