

MINOR IN FINANCE; MINOR IN CHINESE STUDIES

Joanne Mae Y. Cua

When I first entered Ateneo, it was really intimidating for me to have to deal with new people and a new environment in addition to the pressure to do well in academics. Sometimes, the stress would be too much to handle, but one thing I learned from my four years of stay in the Ateneo is that even a small dose of encouragement and optimism can go a long way. To Ateneo, thank you for the challenges and the experience; to the people who have been part of this journey, thank you, as well.

Simon Benedict A. Cuna

Four years ago, a freshman began his journey in Ateneo. Simon started out as the typical SOM student, unaware of the challenges he was about to face for the next four years. He set out to land on the coveted Dean's list, to have a business, and to lead an influential organization on campus. Simon displayed unwavering commitment and dedication in order to accomplish these goals. Senior year came like a breeze, and little did he know it, but Simon had become the person he wanted to be.
