

Victoria Dominique R. Calo

Her laughter is contagious. It echoes into me. It is like watching bubbles rise to the ocean's surface; she breaks my silence. She turns gray skies blue, her warmth radiates all the way through. My friend until the end. Nikki.

Some say that you can only determine that a friendship is true if it has lasted for more than seven years, but there's always an exception. I know that I've found a lifelong friend. He is an inspiration, a bright light in an otherwise dimming world. In his ways, he can be a knight in (not-so) shining armor, a quality I've never quite seen in anyone else. He is bound for bigger things. He will effect change. The world is better off with him in it. (A. Andres)
