

MINOR IN BIOMEDICAL SCIENCES

Francis Nathan C. Castro

Seriousness—often a word never attributed with the likes of Francis. His spontaneous attitude and ability to always look on the bright side of life may be misleading to someone who just met him. People often mistake him for the type of person who'd probably go on a spending spree if he won the lotto tomorrow, but within that playful exterior lies a person who genuinely and seriously cares—and he does this by cheering people up even if it means sacrificing his image to look like a fool.

Paolo Antonio G. Cervantes

Golden—Paolo in a word. He will surely entrance you with his indie pop and take you in the night for bubble tea and chemistry. But rarely may you ever find an artist so compelled by his science, a musician as driven by his philosophy, a heart as pure and as blinding. Humble of his worth, his value to his friends encompasses so greatly. He will shine in the darkest of nights and have you laugh amidst the most terrifying of storms. Though hammered and hidden, there is a reason gold lasts.
