Look, Ma. I made it.

Paul Matthew P. Yap

Dear Paul,
Four years ago, I still remember you were just a young 16-year-old so uncertain about entering college — wondering if a small guy like you would ever be good enough to face such a big world. But somehow, you defied the odds and persevered; and along the way, you met great friends and inspiring mentors to help you see things through. So as you graduate, my advice to you is this: Keep dreaming. Reach for stars, though far they may seem. Even little things can change the world.
