

Patricia Anne B. Pabustan

The past four years haven't been smooth sailing for Pat. There have been all-nighters, midnight existential crises, and homesickness. Still, she learned to power through with a laugh, a good playlist, a quick call home, or a spontaneous trip to Cubao. To have her in your life means having an endless supply of laughter, even through tears, and being secure in knowing she'll always have your back. The past four years haven't been smooth sailing for Pat. But she kept swimming. She'll keep swimming.

Borrowing from Shakespeare, the course of college never did run smooth. I thank my lucky stars – ma famille, mes amis, mon amour – for navigating through the murky, the turbulent, and the calm waters with me. Many times was I lost, but God has been the wind that pushed me to where I'm supposed to go. As the time draws nearer for me to dock, I know this is not the last stop for me. I prepare myself to set sail again and to voyage beyond another horizon. Thank you for being my anchor, Ateneo.
