I entered Ateneo unsure of so many things, but through the all-nighters, deadlines, exams, and (almost) breakdowns, I've come to learn more and discovered myself. My college journey was definitely an emotional, physical, and mental challenge that pushed me to my limits. I'm still unsure where life will take me, but I can't wait to see what else is out there. I wouldn't trade my life in Ateneo for anything, because whatever happens, I know for certain that Ateneo will always be home.

I made it. I graduated every day of my life with my half-hearted, timid steps, and my gutsy, spirited leaps to take me through the uncertain trail. I passed through the papers, the lectures, the projects, the brokenness, the victories, the uncertainties, but I was always my own challenge. I did not travel alone. There were many companions on the road: individuals of extraordinary make, mentors that pointed from the crossroads, friends that I love dearly, and a God. Trudge, crawl, and carry on.
