

MINOR IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

Danielle H. Viovicente

Accomplishment for me is a tick on the list of things to do, a concluded paper, a defended project, or a semester that just ended. I often draft out a means to the finish without much regard on the process of how the output came about. However, now on my way to the final stretch of college, I find myself apprehensive of the end, more so, of the unknown. But amidst my unease on this reality, life begs of me to realize it as a ceaseless development, a journey that fastens itself to the uncharted.

Jerard Anton C. Yap

My parents actually thought that Ateneo would turn me into someone indifferent, self-centered, or at worst, a conyo whose only goal was to get a bachelor's degree from a renowned school.

Through the years, they have witnessed how the conyo has grown to be someone so aware, and even passionate about the prevailing issues of today's society.

This conyo is proud to be an Atenean.