

Joshua Angelo T. Tabilog

We were not supposed to make it. We were never the best, barely the good ones. Never the genius nor the gifted. We are as much destined to be great as we are destined to fail, constantly lingering in uncertainty thrice a year. We came here with shades of greatness shadowed by scars of failures. We were not supposed to make it. Yet here we are.

MINOR IN FRENCH STUDIES

Chrissa Jem A. Tan

Four years forward and I am still quite certain one would continue to recognize that awkward product of an all-girl catholic school. Aside from the deceptive young look that would shock anyone upon knowing that she is about to finish college, this girl has nothing to prove about who she is and who she isn't. Jem--that pretty, gentle, and one of a kind girl--turned out to be one fine woman. Far from perfect, but surely like me, her friends would know how life can't be complete without her in it.