

Tan Yu Kun U. Fabro

The term “wallflower” is too often equated with silence, but there are certain people who make the world better by simply understanding.

Yu Kun has never been one for many words, but her actions have always spoken volumes. In the Ateneo, she has figured out passion and persistence often aren’t verbalized but acted out, and has learned to listen, to question, and to care. She is quiet, but sometimes, the most impactful people are the quiet ones--the brave wallflowers of the world.

(D. Cheng)

Celina Ysabel H. Gacias

I never expected to be delayed, but the past year has taught me that my newfound condition cannot, will not, and should not define me—only I can. At the end my stay, all I have is gratefulness—for the friends and family who stuck it out with me, for the experiences that unmoored and anchored me, and for the lessons that have transformed how I see the world. The next chapter of my life is a continuing commitment to act on God’s behalf in these difficult times, all while staying true to who I am.