A prince was strolling in the forest when he met a bird going to a cave. The prince asked, "Is it not better to be outside?" The bird replied, "I saw the light and it was good, and I had all the comfort under the sun. But some have yet to see beyond the fearful horizon where I come from, so I must tell them what I saw."

The prince had been outside for years. He went in search of the darkness that once enveloped him, to help free those whose eyes had gotten used to Stygian gloom. (C. Pino)
