

DhiAnne A. Lapuz

Before Ateneo, I liked playing safe. I was never the one to go out of my comfort zone. I was content with my small personal bubble, but Ateneo made me realize that I should aim higher. Ateneo pushed me out of my comfort zone. For that, I am thankful, because I found friends and learned lessons that I will treasure forever.

Here's to the never-ending all-nighters, countless cups of coffee, endless papers, nerve-racking oral exams.

I made it. We made it. Thank you, Ateneo.

MINOR IN FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

For all the debits and credits, losses and gains, outflows and inflows, risks and returns, thank you, Ateneo. Thank you for giving me my best asset—finding balance between who I am and who I can be. Thank you for teaching me to constantly breathe in the beauty of the world through my lens and be comfortable with uncertainties, for one cannot imagine a world without a bright escape from a tunnel of darkness. Thank you for reminding me that everything—however bad it may seem—will still end well.
