

MINOR IN CREATIVE WRITING

Philip Angelo U. Yap

I began my stay in college armed only with my love for reading and my belief that I could write. I teetered between calm waters and crashing waves, and I didn't always know what I was doing. But this journey strengthened my love for my hobbies and turned them into my passions. I don't regret the failures, the missteps, the rejections, for they eventually led me to my achievements and my personal growth. Now, a hundred papers and a million words later, I'm ready for the next chapter of my story.

MINOR IN JAPANESE STUDIES

It's been a wild journey. Four years ago when I first stepped foot into the Ateneo, I had absolutely no idea why I was here and what I would become. All I knew was that I was afraid, excited, and overwhelmed by everything. Four years later, I'm still clueless and anxious as ever. However, now I understand that this is where I was supposed to be. In Ateneo I was able to explore new horizons and encounter better and worse versions of myself. Thank you, Ateneo. Now, where shall I go from here?
