Most people know her as the 13-year-old who went to college, but there is more to what meets the eye. She sailed in a sea of aspiring Ateneans at the age of 12, anchoring on her dream, and is now ready to dock, not as the best in the world, but as the best she could ever be. Amidst 4 years of an unending chain of classes and rehearsals, she has grown to become the girl whose voice resonates, who never does things half-baked, who wears her heart on her sleeve, and who knows that she is enough.

To be patient with the process, to see the possibility of change, to find hope in the gravest situation, to appreciate the mundane, to stand up after a failure, to celebrate the simplest success, to be there for people, to embark in imperfect adventures, and to know that I am not loved any less. These are the lessons which shaped my perception of triumph – lessons which I will bring with me as I go on with life.
