

Kristina Eleanor L. Lim

We might find ourselves in wonder with how much can change in a matter of four years. I was once so set to pursue the plans my 16-year-old self laid out for me, but college taught me to pursue what truly sets my soul on fire, to embrace uncertainty and allow it to lead me to where I can find myself. Here's my advice: Shift out of a course that doesn't fuel your passion, travel and search for things you can never find at home, and don't hold back. Trust me; I'm thankful for where these led me to.

MINOR IN DECISION SCIENCE

Rachel Esmeralda Gabrielle M. Lombos

Coming into college, Gabbie was a strong believer in kakayanin — in the unshakeable faith that she could overcome anything, regardless of how bleak things got. Over the past four years, that faith has been tested more times than she can count: in crammed papers, three-hour exams, and problems of a more existential bent. College was her becoming, and she is grateful for everything. Kakayanin, at kakayanin pa rin. (D. Cheng)