

MINOR IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

Patricia Isabel B. Jaranilla

These last four years have taught me that everything goes back to the choices we make—and the choices we don't. Everything, from the littlest everyday choices to the life-changing ones, has an impact.

This one's for my parents, who let me make my own choices; for my family, who chooses me back regardless; and for my friends, because it matters just as much whom we make these choices with.

MINOR IN SOCIOLOGY

Same people to meet, same choices to make; would you repeat college all over again?

Yes.

College has taught me that failure is a beautiful thing. That I should embrace the downs, because without them, there will be no ups. That I will never be who I am without my weaknesses, and that I should be proud to have them because they help me discover where my passions are. It's a beautiful thing to have these downs—they keep me grounded, but at the same time, they push me to new heights.
