In spite of the pressure to become someone fit for the real world in just four years, college has taught me to value my friends and family, to hop in that van for a spontaneous trip, to get that much-needed beer(s), to take risks, to always dream and never be afraid to fail, to live life regardless of the consequences, and ultimately, to see beauty in life's complexity. Thank you for the sixteen amazing years, Ateneo. And to everyone who has helped me be who I am now: Tara, drinks are on me.

“The country? The skies? You can have them. I’m busy just protecting what’s right in front of me. I don’t know what’ll happen to me in the future, but if something has fallen at my feet, then the least I can do is pick it up.” (G. Sakata, Gintama)
