

MINOR IN DEVELOPMENT STUDIES

Joseph Emmanuel K. Tamin

I'll always remember Ateneo's annoying but memorable school bell. All those times not finishing a test, running around the campus to submit requirements, acing my orals, having lunch with my closest friends, knowing that it was time for orgs, prayer meetings, volleyball and teaching kids are all tied to that nostalgic ringing that made me happy, sad, and excited. I've grown to love it in the end. Now, that bell tells me to move on to another chapter of my life and to not be late this time!

MINOR IN MARKETING; MINOR IN CHINESE STUDIES

Aldwyn Sean K. Tan

Ateneo has been a continuous cycle of learning what it means to trust, love, get hurt and broken down; but at the same time, heal, hope, and build myself up again. Having my fair share of good and bad experiences has helped me grow and learn more about myself along the way. If there's one thing I'm certain of after all this, I can say, "I am who I am" with conviction, not because I accepted the kind of person who I just am, but because I was able to commit to the kind of person I chose to be.
