“I haven’t started yet.” This is perhaps my most used sentence because throughout my college life, I’ve been cramming papers, long tests, and even orals. Unsurprisingly, I find myself cramming my yearbook write-up just hours before the deadline.

Thank you, Ateneo, for 16 amazing years. Upon graduation, my school life officially concludes, but as the cliché goes, “It’s not the end, it’s just the beginning.” It’s the beginning of a new journey ahead—a journey that I haven’t started yet.

MINOR IN DECISION SCIENCE

From late classes to altogether missed classes, from JSEC lunch to JSEC Challenge, from all-nighters to impromptu sleepovers, from fun nonsense to panel defenses, but most of all, from the friendless first days to my newfound constants in college—it’s been a good run up top. The climb up the hill was a tough one, but the view from here is quite worth it. For this, I will forever be grateful, Ateneo.
