

Charlene A. Brillantes

Because of the passion and love for the things she does and what she aspires to attain, Charlene has become a truly determined individual. May it be in academics, dance, or anything else, she believes that things must not only be done, but they should be done well. This principle has allowed her to surpass the life that is college, and hopefully, this will make way for her to go further and transcend whatever she may face in the future.

Sue P. Camanay

Four years in an eternal blue. Against storms and whipping winds. A ragged remains of a vessel appears against the dawn. Bearing vibrant colors on a tattered frame, it announces: the captain has returned.

The Ateneo was a sea of many things I have never encountered. Yet I kept sailing. What I thought would drown me kept me afloat, pushed me further, and broadened my horizons. Now I have surmounted the trial. I have returned ashore. And I am ready to sail again.
