

Danica Lou T. Akiat

Thank you Dad, Ma, Kuya Louie, Kuya Pips, Tan2x, and to all the people who supported me and believed in me throughout my four years in Ateneo. Most of all, thank You, Lord!

The future is home for our wildest dreams and deepest fears, and it is never the way we imagine it to be. Yet I can't pretend I haven't spent so much time worrying about it and planning for it before fully understanding what Benjamin Franklin meant when he said, "One today is worth two tomorrows" — that no matter how small a good thing today holds, it is better than the great maybes of tomorrow. Thank you Ateneo, not for giving me better tomorrows but for teaching me to make each day a good one.
