

MINOR IN DECISION SCIENCE

Paolo Enrique T. Palanca

“To truly make a difference in the world, one must set sail and not let the anchor get in the way. Paolo is the epitome of that. Every year, his dreams of being the best version of himself have led him all around the world and into the hearts of many. Along the way, he brings the same zest for life, genuine compassion, and incomparable wit that makes him who he is. As Paolo embarks on the vast and infinite ocean that is life, he conquers the world the only way he knows how to – with love.”

MINOR IN ENGLISH LITERATURE

Arthur Thomas I. Perlada

I think what Ateneo taught me most is to make every experience special. It's how you get the courage to take Dacanay, or to take five hours of straight classes. It's how you appreciate your passionate org mates and work with someone seemingly unbearable. It's how an F teaches you just as much as a B+, just short of an A. In every moment you can find some value, good or bad. I'm thankful I got the chance to learn that in Ateneo.
