Being awake for 30 hours straight allows you to do a lot of things. It gives you the strength to line up at 6:30AM for tickets to an Ateneo-La Salle game. It gives you the courage to go to your 1:15PM orals soaking wet because you didn't bring an umbrella. It lets you appreciate the four hours of sleep you'll get when the day is over. At the end of the day, appreciate your struggles, because they make the journey toward your dreams all the more worthwhile.

Throughout my stay in Ateneo, I realized that the best things in life aren't free at all – they demand your time, effort, and loyalty, and they demand lots of it. The last four years have been magnificent, and I'm glad I went through them with people I can consider family. Earning relationships that will last a lifetime is much more important than financial earnings to me. Thanks for sharing this adventure with me, everyone. Now let's all go and have a new one.
