

MINOR IN JAPANESE STUDIES

Dominique Raphaella Anne T. Tan

I don't think a lot of my college friends know how the conversations we've had and the experiences we've shared have developed me into the kind of person I am today. I don't know how life will end up for most of us, or if I'll see my friends as often. The future might hold changes, but these memories will be forever frozen in time. It doesn't matter what the future holds, because I'll always keep these memories close to my heart.

MINOR IN FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT

Isabella Louise L. Tan

The moments in our lives may be fleeting, but the memories we hold on to, the strength and resilience we gain from overcoming obstacles, and the way our lives are touched by everyone that we meet never leave us. For the countless memories that continue to make me smile and that I will always cherish, for the struggles that have taught me to push myself beyond what I thought possible, for the people who have shown me the value of life and friendship – thank you, Ateneo.
