Emmanuel Joseph M. Mamaril

I remember thinking what it was going to be like, how exciting college was going to be. Well, it soon came to be a huge understatement—I had fun, I crammed, I cried, I met people and friends who became family, I lived. College was a springboard to life, or yet, an awakening to it. It taught me to let go of apprehensions, of too much control. It taught me to stay open to possibilities—that not all will make sense now, but in the acceptance of the uncertain is where I will find my growth.

With much gratitude, I will remember this gift of a journey although the seas were not always calm and the people I met were not all kindred spirits. The perils that accompanied the storms, the challenges posed by some whom I had encountered, and the safe harbors made my Ateneo experience not only exhilarating but humbling as well.

I pray that the Divine will continue to grant me a caring heart, a keen mind, and a helpful hand for all the endless possibilities that await me ashore.
