The inviting waters of ADMU turned out to be four years of trying to keep myself afloat, four years of battling unexpected storms, and four years of savouring occasional smooth sailings. Having reached the next pit stop in this journey, I can take a look back to the waters that I have traversed and can safely say that I am grateful for everything that happened in and out of those waters.

Ever since I was a kid, I dreamt of becoming a doctor. Four years ago, I made an unexpected decision to go to Ateneo and it was a decision I never regret. From waking up early on Wednesdays for my shift in a Barangay Health Center to the sleepless nights and all the realizations I had in Leyte, my Ateneo experience taught me to be more. To take more risks. To appreciate the little things more. To always give more than I think I can. Thank you Ateneo for giving me the opportunity to be more.
