

Karl Mitchell D. Kopio

If there was one thing I learned in my stay in Ateneo, it's that you cannot live your life chasing the dreams of those who came before you. You are your own person, and whatever your future holds is in your hands. Although management has been my major for the past four years, it was music that always welcomed me back into its arms. I cannot stress enough how music has been and always will be my passion, and nothing will ever stop me from living that dream.

MINOR IN STRATEGIC HUMAN RESOURCES

Kriza Mae D. Kosca

The view is different now.
The once unfamiliar clusters of trees and buildings is now a place of memories – a second home. The fleeting smiles from people once strangers are now tender gestures from friends – a second family. All the struggles and defeats dim in comparison to each lesson learned, each love shared, and each joy experienced. Looking back at all the people I met in this journey, all the memories we shared, and all the choices I made, I can heartily say that all was worth it.