

MINOR IN MARKETING

Adriel Joseph V. De Leon

A two-fold advice from an admittedly average Atenean: embrace yourself and dare to fail. Expand your horizons, but accept your limitations. Better be the mystery that you are than “quite” the personality that you’re not. Learn to be patient with yourself so you can do the same to others. There will be voices telling you that you can’t do it, and that’s okay. You will realize that victory is never as glorious without what you learn in failure. If you never lose hope, you will never lose.

MINOR IN ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT

Angela Kay R. Del Rosario

It was in college that I was really able to embrace my true self, making genuine connections with individuals who have now become like family, committing myself to starting a new venture, and signing up for an org that led to me constantly witness the world’s beauty. Thank you, Ateneo, for helping me realize that taking a chance on myself and what calls me can always lead to truly wonderful things.
