I used to think that I wake up every single morning and live every day to get by, to go to school, to study and to play. Four years in this school changed all that. Ateneo gave me a new perspective to my life, a new reason to live everyday. In four years' time I have grown and been defeated. I have fought and learned to love. I've developed discipline in all other aspects and many more. Thank you for these four years, Ateneo.

I journey on a tiny and odd boat in the fierce sea of Ateneo. This gets me to think I'm sailing the wrong waters. However, it's not about my boat, or me, or the currents. I will sail any sea for the open chest waiting for a heart transplant, for the kid receiving lecture on unaltered history, and for the homeless mother and son finally sleeping on a bed, away from the rumbling buzz of the highway. For my friends. For my family. For the loves of my life.
