

Alexander Michael C. Ong

Vulnerability, a recurring theme in my college life. Though still quite a sheltered wallflower, what I learned is this: that there is much to experience in the world. To live life to the fullest, I have to bare my heart in the face of suffering, to immerse myself amidst the chaos that is life, to carry hope in the face of despair. Only then can I see its beauty and loveliness. And so here I am, struggling to cast aside the comfort of certainty, and learning still to seize the day. Onward.

Patricia Ann F. Pangilinan

My stay in Ateneo has taught me how to think more critically, as well as how to find resources when there seems to be none at hand. Here's to the storms we've braved together, the days when there seemed to be no wind, the sleepless nights, and the moments when we couldn't navigate towards our destination. We may be graduating, but the journey hasn't ended, it's only just begun.