It wouldn't be a college requirement if I didn't pass it minutes before the deadline. To my dearest companion, Procrastination, you've accompanied me in every waking moment of my college life. Oh, how I wish you didn't. As I say goodbye to everyone on graduation day, I hope we can share a final farewell as well. At long last, this abusive relationship of ours may come to an end. It was often fun, but ultimately not worth it every time. Good riddance.

Three lessons in Ateneo:

One, God may or may not exist. No matter how hard anyone tries, the existence of God only ever remains a possibility.

Two, results and transactions are everything. Efforts to make a good project or paper are meaningless to grades in AISIS. The ACET shaved off poor results. Tuition lets us study in this school and grades keep us from being kicked out. Finally, creativity is necessary to face the first two lessons. We decide how we face these harsh realities positively.
