Kataware-doki: twilight; an encounter with the supernatural. College was my never dissipating twilight, until the very last, when the dawn of a new chapter comes. The morning is near, but the dream will never end.

My favorite personal saying is, “to waltz on thin ice.” This reflects much of my attitudes in response to life’s ever-changing fortunes. To waltz on thin ice means to gracefully conduct oneself through life in the midst of the ever-present possibility of falling. I suppose my days in Ateneo were years to practice this. When by fortune, I am compelled to tread along the uncertainties of life beyond Ateneo, then I hope to gracefully waltz forward towards the end knowing I practiced.
