

MINOR IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

Jenny T. Sucaldito

Maneuvering with you is one of the many firsts. It was quite a grueling journey, actually. We're on a roll at times, filled with ups and downs. Being with you sometimes does not make sense anymore, but I've managed to stay, and I am glad I did. So for all the pain caused by your constant rejections; for giving me hope only to take it back in an instant; and for all the success, guidance, and happiness you have brought in four years that helped me arrive at who I am now thank you, Ateneo.

Jennine Stephanie S. Sze

There a few hundred things I've learned in Ateneo, but the thing that sticks out most to me is the fact that getting to East Carpark from MVP with unmuddied, unsquirted-on ankles and socks is completely impossible. It can be a weird metaphor for life if you want it to be, I guess, but what I mostly got is that I'd go home with my whole outfit caked in mud if it meant I could meet the people I've met there in MVP.
