

Beatriz Rosario
B. Racoma

MINOR IN FICTION

Julian
E. Sison

There once was an Intelligence who wanted to demonstrate his self-awareness like all the other I's, but to do that he had to prove himself to his mentors. Be Excellent, was the advice he heard them say. So he excelled where he specialized, and tried not to fail where he didn't. For a while he was frustrated. Pointing out to his mentors that their advice was unrealistic, they showed him that in his eagerness, he had only heard the first two words of their true wisdom: Be Excellent to each other.